Author Chris Palzis of the GOODNESS GRACIOUS CLUB series (Good Manners, Good Sportsmanship, Good Grades) tells your audience:

- How to have fun while teaching their kids to be more polite.
- The importance of active versus passive learning.
- How to make their spouse happier while simultaneously teaching their children better manners.
- Effective tools to recession-proof their kids.
- Necessary sportsmanship techniques that translate into success in the classroom, playground and workplace.
- How to avoid the contagion of rudeness.
- Proven memorization techniques that shorten study time.

"Parents, even the most polite children will act offensively at times. The worst part is that they are likely – without you realizing it – to have learned their behavior from you!"

A former recreational therapist (turned children's book author), Chris Palzis has been featured on Bravo, NBC, CBS, and Fox. He has lectured across the country sharing his positive message with kids, parents, grandparents and teachers alike. A virtual one man show, Chris authors, publishes and self distributes the books all by himself proving that even in this challenging economic climate you still can make things happen. The Goodness Gracious Club also donates a portion of the proceeds to the We Need To Read Foundation that promotes continued education for under privileged youths while mentoring the children with real life heroes from all walks of life such as policemen, firemen, nurses and doctors. His books have sold thousands of copies across the country.

A recent study by the organization Public Agenda found that 79% of Americans believe that discourtesy has become a prevalent problem in our society, and 61% think that rudeness has become worse in recent years.

This study also proves that rude behavior is contagious. The journal, Organizational Behavior and Human

Decision Processes, found that people who witnessed rude behavior were less productive and more inclined to display a bad attitude of their own...study suggests than an isolated rude comment could provoke conscious as well as subconscious aggressive thoughts that may prime individuals to behave in an aggressive manner."
